Allen Dulles Comments on Hungary and Poland.

(Service of the Chicago Tribune.)
Washington Nov 14 Allen

W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence agency, said today the recent uprisings in Poland and Hungary disclosed weaknesses on the part of Russia which surprised both the Soviet leaders and the non-Communist nations.

Dulles told the American Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities that the non-Communist world as well as the Kremlin leaders themselves may have been overimpressed by Russia's apparent military strength. The revolts in Poland and Hungary, he asserted, revealed weaknesses "which many in the free world did not anticipate" and indicated that the Soviet rulers must have figured that their satellite countries were safely under control after 10 years of iron discipline.
